SYNOPSIS

Abi, young woman (age 19), returns in the guise of a young man followed by a young girl (8) to the misty winter landscape of the salt marsh flats of Pett Levels where she is meets a white horse in the dawn mist. Has she returned to this barren sheep farming landscape to find her now married first love Tina or is there a darker motive? Who is the strange young girl who follows her as she watches people, tracks down and reconnects. Are the memories of the past and abuse we see the child's or Abi's as she seems to seek revenge on those in the community who colluded with Ian a powerful corrupt farmer in the community who abused her, who cages the white horse on his isolated farm surrounded by wind turbines and electricity pylons. Is it he that perhaps also cages Abi's childhood? A collusion of abuse which seems to seep back generations in the community that now have turned their abuse to refugee girls they smuggle in along the coast. As Abi rekindles her love with Tina the daughter of Ian , her abuser, and the truth starts to unravel strange things start to happen in the village. People start to turn on Ian. Sheep die, powerlines hum, people disappear. Are the disturbing events part of Abi's revenge or has Tina's abuse been ignited by her reconnection to Abi. The complicity in community starts to self implode and Ian is ostracised by the village and with no way out we wonder about his fate at thee hands of those he has abused caged and cages.. As Ian meets his fate Abi leaves as she comes walking through the mist with the child to meet the horse on the levels guided by another young woman, Tina. As Abi walks away with Tina she leaves her past behind. The child watches them go, choosing to remain with the horse in this lost place.
